

How Student Founder Arnav Tyagi Built Dreamplays HQ Using Just a Smartphone

From learning code on an old mobile to welcoming global users, Indian teen startup Dreamplays HQ launches free educational site AYARTSTUDIO.

Rudrapur, Uttarakhand Aug 10, 2026 (IssueWire.com) - Dreamplays HQ, a student-led technology startup, today announced the expansion of its digital learning ecosystem aimed at making web platforms accessible to all. Founded by student innovator Arnav Tyagi, the initiative demonstrates how high-impact digital products can be created using minimal hardware resources.

The journey began in March when Arnav Tyagi, inspired by successful entrepreneurs, sought to create technology that would contribute positively to his community and country. Initially holding back due to the common belief that web development required high-end laptops and expensive infrastructure, Tyagi shifted his approach during his summer vacation in June.

Instead of taking a break, Arnav Tyagi dedicated up to 6 hours daily researching Google documentation, developer forums, and technical resources on an old mobile device. Overcoming technical hurdles through self-taught HTML, programming logic, and AI integration, he proved that functional web development is possible through determination and continuous learning.

Under the Dreamplays HQ umbrella, Arnav Tyagi launched AYARTSTUDIO, a free digital art and learning platform designed for beginners. As project scope expanded, Arnav Tyagi brought on Yugank Vishnoi as Co-Founder to manage full-stack development, combining frontend and backend technical capabilities to scale the platform.

Today, Dreamplays HQ has crossed over 500 active visitors from around the globe, attracting users from India, the US, China, and other international regions. The startup has also earned official recognition and technical certifications from Google-backed programs for its developer initiatives.

"You don't need expensive gadgets to start," said Founder & CEO Arnav Tyagi. "You only need a structured vision, the courage to learn, and the determination to keep building."
