Iraqi technology expert Mohammed Hisham Ali is highlighting the growing opportunities available to Arab youth as digital transformation continues to reshape businesses, services and employment.

The rapid adoption of digital technologies is creating new pathways for young people to develop professional skills, build digital projects and participate in the growing digital economy. Areas such as technology services, freelancing, digital content and e-commerce are becoming increasingly relevant to young professionals seeking new opportunities.

Ali emphasizes that digital transformation is not limited to the adoption of new technologies. It also involves developing practical skills and understanding how digital tools can be used to improve services, solve problems and create new business opportunities.

“Digital transformation is creating new opportunities for young people across the Arab world,” said Mohammed Hisham Ali. “Developing practical digital skills and understanding how technology can be applied in real-world situations can help young people participate more effectively in the digital economy.”

According to Ali, young professionals can benefit from focusing on practical technology skills, digital communication, online business models and the responsible use of emerging digital tools. These areas can provide opportunities for individuals to develop independent projects and connect with wider markets.

He also highlights the importance of digital awareness and technology education in helping young people adapt to changes in the modern workplace. As businesses increasingly rely on digital platforms and services, familiarity with technology is becoming an important component of professional development.

The continued growth of digital services is also creating opportunities for businesses and entrepreneurs to reach customers through online channels, introduce new services and expand beyond traditional markets.

Ali believes that greater access to digital knowledge and practical experience can contribute to stronger participation by Arab youth in the digital economy.
