

Myra L. Weiner Explores Science, Survival, and Healing in Uprooting the Poison Tree

An internationally recognized toxicologist transforms life's most painful experiences into a memoir of resilience, faith, and self-discovery.

Wilmington, Delaware Aug 10, 2026 (IssueWire.com) - Dr. Myra L. Weiner announces the release of Uprooting the Poison Tree, a memoir that intertwines science, family, spirituality, and personal resilience through the lens of toxicology. Drawing from a distinguished career as an internationally recognized toxicologist, Weiner recounts her journey from a curious young girl fascinated by nature to a pioneering scientist who built a successful career in a male-dominated profession while confronting profound personal challenges. Through carefully chosen poison metaphors and the emotional "antidotes" that sustained her, the memoir offers readers an honest reflection on healing, perseverance, and purpose.

Rather than presenting adversity as an obstacle alone, Uprooting the Poison Tree examines how life's most difficult experiences can become catalysts for growth. Weiner reflects on childhood trauma, family struggles, workplace inequality, motherhood, and her lifelong search for spiritual meaning, while demonstrating how scientific thinking shaped her understanding of resilience. The memoir speaks to readers interested in STEM, women's history, faith, emotional healing, and personal transformation, showing that professional achievement and inner healing often evolve together rather than separately.

"Unfortunately, there are no ready-made antidotes to cure life's personal challenges; we must find them ourselves. My own search for effective antidotes kept me focused on the ever-present goal of achieving a full and meaningful life on all levels," she wrote in her memoir.

This reflection from the manuscript captures the central philosophy of Uprooting the Poison Tree, where scientific principles become metaphors for navigating emotional wounds, family complexities, and the lifelong pursuit of purpose, forgiveness, and spiritual fulfillment.

Dr. Myra L. Weiner is an internationally recognized toxicologist who has authored more than forty scientific publications and is an elected member of the American Board of Toxicology and the Academy of Toxicological Sciences. Her professional accomplishments were featured in Her STEM Career: Adventures of 51 Remarkable Women, and after nearly three decades in corporate toxicology she founded her consulting firm, Toxpertise, LLC. Now retired, Weiner continues to write while sharing the experiences that shaped both her scientific career and personal journey.
