

Building a Covenant Marriage Through Faith, Family, Finances, and Fun

New Book by Vic Speakman Provides Couples With Biblical Guidance and Practical Tools to Build Stronger Marriages Through Every Season of Life

Decatur, Georgia Sep 10, 2026 (Issuewire.com) - Marriage is more than sharing a home, raising a family, or building a life together. It is a covenant, a commitment made before God that calls two people to grow, forgive, communicate, serve, and walk through life's seasons together.

Now available to readers, Building a Covenant Marriage Through Faith, Family, Finances, and Fun by Vic Speakman offers a thoughtful and practical approach to strengthening marriage through biblical principles, meaningful conversations, and intentional action. Written from Speakman's experience as a pastor and his desire to encourage couples through different seasons of life, the book focuses on four essential areas of married life: Faith, Family, Finances, and Fun.

A Marriage Built on Covenant

At the heart of Vic Speakman's message is the understanding that marriage is not simply a relationship or a contract. It is a sacred covenant established by God. This biblical perspective encourages couples to approach marriage with commitment rather than convenience. It shapes how they communicate, resolve disagreements, forgive one another, manage finances, build intimacy, raise their children, and respond to life's challenges.

When couples understand marriage as a covenant, everyday challenges can be approached differently. Communication becomes an opportunity to understand rather than simply to be heard. Conflict becomes an opportunity for growth rather than competition. Forgiveness becomes a pathway toward healing, while finances and family responsibilities become areas of shared stewardship and partnership.

Four Pillars for a Stronger Marriage

The book's framework of Faith, Family, Finances, and Fun addresses the areas where couples experience marriage every day. Faith provides the foundation and keeps couples connected to God. Family reminds couples of their shared responsibilities and purpose. Finances encourage unity, wisdom, partnership, and stewardship. Fun preserves friendship, laughter, enjoyment, and the importance of creating memories together.

Together, these four pillars encourage couples to look beyond simply maintaining a marriage and instead intentionally build a life and covenant together.

Learning to Face Conflict Together

Every marriage experiences disagreements. The question is not whether couples will face conflict, but how they will respond when it happens. The book addresses communication, conflict resolution, forgiveness, and restoration while encouraging couples to remember that they are on the same team. Instead of approaching conflict as "me versus you," couples are encouraged to approach challenges as partners working together.

The book emphasizes listening before speaking, speaking truth in love, controlling anger, extending grace, and practicing forgiveness. Its goal is not for one spouse to win while the other loses. Instead, the goal is understanding, healing, reconciliation, and growth within the marriage.

Strengthening Trust, Intimacy, and Financial Unity

Finances can have a significant impact on married life. From raising children and preparing for emergencies to saving, giving, and pursuing shared dreams, financial decisions often require couples to work together. Speakman's book approaches finances through stewardship, honesty, transparency, and shared responsibility, encouraging couples to develop greater trust and unity when making financial decisions.

The book also explores intimacy as something much deeper than physical closeness. It addresses spiritual, emotional, relational, intellectual, and physical intimacy, encouraging couples to develop connection through prayer, honest conversations, listening, laughter, shared dreams, problem-solving, and intentionally making time for one another.

Building a Stronger Family Through a Stronger Marriage

Marriage also has a powerful influence on the family. The book presents parenting as a shared calling and highlights how children learn about love, forgiveness, communication, and faith by watching their parents. A Christ-centered marriage can become a living example of grace, commitment, faithfulness, and love.

The book recognizes that marriages move through changing seasons. Careers change, children grow, parents age, finances shift, dreams evolve, and families may experience grief, disappointment, and unexpected challenges. Through these seasons, couples are encouraged to continue communicating, praying, making time for each other, and giving one another grace.

More Than a Book, A Resource Couples Can Experience Together

One of the key strengths of Building a Covenant Marriage Through Faith, Family, Finances, and Fun is its practical and interactive approach. The resource includes discussion questions, couple exercises, weekly practices, prayer focuses, assessments, worksheets, and a companion exercise booklet. These tools are designed to help couples move beyond simply reading about marriage and begin having meaningful conversations and taking intentional steps together.

The purpose is not simply to provide information. It is to encourage transformation through biblical truth, honest conversation, prayer, and practical action.

A Resource for Couples, Pastors, and Counselors

Building a Covenant Marriage Through Faith, Family, Finances, and Fun is designed to serve couples as well as pastors and counselors who work with married couples. For couples, the book provides a resource they can return to throughout their marriage, whether they are working through a challenge or simply looking for ways to become stronger together. For pastors and counselors, it offers practical material that can support meaningful conversations around real-life marital challenges.

Vic Speakman's message is not that marriages must be perfect. Instead, the book is built around the belief that marriages can grow. Couples can learn to communicate better, forgive more freely, rebuild trust, deepen intimacy, become financially united, strengthen their families, enjoy one another, and most importantly, grow closer to God together.
