Potsdam, Sep 24, 2026 (IssueWire.com) - Music can be considered one of the finest creative mediums for time travel, with modern music artists bringing back the musical taste of the early days. Being a perfect example in this case, the unknown artist has come up with a new song that brings the taste of '80s and early '90s electronic rock flavors. The track is titled 'People standing in line', a deftly crafted musical creation that can captivate all kinds of listeners. The song speaks about people and explores the idea of power dynamics in a subtle, creative, and engaging way.

Andreas König, better known as the unknown artist, is an independent musician from Berlin who mainly works with electronic rock, synths, and other elements of the retro era of the '80s and early '90s. That is the sound he grew up with, and now he is exploring the genres with his unique solo creations. The latest track 'People standing in line' is currently revolving at the centre of everyone's attention and it is also his 14th single release that paves the way for a full-length album release. The song speaks of powerlessness among people and their struggles, which every listener can relate to.

The artist considers new wave and post-punk bands like "New Order", "Depeche Mode," "The White Lies", etc. as his creative inspiration, whose music influenced him to work on the combination of electronic sounds and synthesizers along with high-octane rock elements. With a handful of recorded projects, the unknown artist is preparing to drop a unique retroesque album in the coming days.
