Lakeland, Florida Sep 4, 2026 (IssueWire.com) - Solace Press today announced the launch of Before You're 13, a monthly letter series created to help children ages 10–12 build practical life skills before their teenage years.

Most parents can feel the shift coming. Children want more independence. Friendships become more complicated. Choices begin happening when a parent is not nearby. Before You're 13 was created to give families another way to prepare for those moments.

Each month, a real letter arrives in the mail addressed directly to the child. The letters are written in the voice of Jordan, a relatable older-sibling-style guide rather than a teacher. Each letter focuses on one practical topic, such as confidence, friendships and peer pressure, money and responsibility, kindness, decision-making, or independence.

Every letter includes a short story and a small mission the child can try in real life. The goal is to make important lessons approachable, memorable, and easier for families to talk about.

Before You're 13 is intentionally screen-free. There is no app, login, or online lesson for the child to complete. Instead, children receive something increasingly unusual: mail with their own name on it, created specifically for them to open, read, think about, and keep.

One letter, for example, addresses group-chat drama by starting with a personal story from Jordan and then giving the child one practical skill to use when online conversations become difficult.

Alongside the launch, Solace Press is introducing a Community Gift Program that will provide a limited number of complimentary one-year subscriptions to children selected through participating schools and youth-serving organizations.

Before You're 13 is $7.99 per month. A Welcome Letter ships within five days, and the next monthly letter mails September 8, 2026. Parents can learn more or subscribe at BeforeYoure13.com.
