What Are Composite Veneers?

Composite veneers are thin layers of tooth-coloured resin shaped and bonded onto the front of the teeth. They can improve the appearance of chips, small gaps, uneven edges and stubborn staining. Because the material is built up and sculpted directly on the tooth, many patients can be treated in a single appointment, and in many cases little or no healthy enamel needs to be removed.

The shape, shade and finish are discussed and agreed beforehand, so the final result reflects what each patient is looking for.

Clear Costs Before Treatment Begins

Patients researching the veneers price in London will find that costs vary depending on the number of teeth treated and the complexity of the case. To avoid surprises, the practice gives every patient a written treatment plan after the first consultation, confirming the full cost before any work starts.

Patients who want to improve several teeth at once can ask about a composite veneers package during their consultation, so the total can be planned and agreed in advance.

What Patients Can Expect

The process begins with a consultation, where the dentist examines the teeth and gums, discusses the patient's goals and explains whether composite veneers are the right option. If they are, the veneers are placed, shaped and polished to blend naturally with the surrounding teeth.

Aftercare is straightforward. Patients are advised to brush and floss daily, attend regular check-ups and limit habits that can stain or chip the resin, such as drinking large amounts of tea, coffee or red wine and biting hard objects. With good care, composite veneers can last for several years, and minor wear can usually be polished or repaired.
