Along with other stone masterpieces, stone uruli crafted by the skilled local craftsmen of this company showcases the beauty of age-old stone carving art of India.

Uruli (also called Urli) is a traditional circular vessel, not deep enough, that has its origin in South India, particularly the beautiful green state of Kerala. It's interesting to know the past behind Uruli that is linked to Sangam Literature and Chola Dynasty. Historically in the 3rd Century BCE during the Sangam Literature period, it was used for large-scale cooking in temples, Sadya (big feasts) and joint family kitchens to prepare curries, payasam, or lentils. At that time the material used was clay which later between 9-13th century CE at the time of Chola Dynasty had evolved into copper, bronze and brass.

It was considered an important element in rituals and festivals. At the time of the Malayalam New Year (also called Vishu) it was filled with auspicious items and water to create the display of Vishu Kani.

In modern times, from big kitchenware, uruli has now emerged as a popular home décor accent. It is used widely in all festivals and important occasions, particularly at home, office, or hotel entrances, filled with water and floating flowers and candles. Uruli with water and flower petals floating symbolises prosperity, peace, and happiness. Thus, it is considered a perfect Vastu décor accent as well.

Stonemart ™, known for promoting ancient Indian art, has introduced various designs in Uruli for South India, which are even very popular in North India. Every Uruli at Stonemart ™ is carved by the hands of local craftsmen using a hammer and chisel out of pure natural stone. Considering the historical importance of size, here you can find big-size stone uruli with great carvings and detailing. You can find sandstone uruli, natural stone uruli, or granite uruli by Stonemart ™ in various sizes and designs that are a mix of traditional and modern styles.

The big-size granite uruli with urn shape carving details by Stonemart ™ and a pedestal underneath offers a feel of luxurious ancient times. You get the same feel of palaces, kings, and queens with this intricate hand-carved granite urn shaped uruli.

Similarly, the skilled craftsmen of Stonemart ™ carve stunning elephant uruli with a pedestal to offer a mix of traditional and modern décor. Amazing is to find its all hand-carved by bare hands using hammer, chisel and basic tools like hand cutters.

There are other patterns of uruli crafted by Stonemart ™ in the form of unique flower-shaped uruli. To add a modern feel, it is even converted into a fountain or a water feature, thus stunning the modern décor with its look and utility. At Stonemart ™, you get the best uruli décor ideas that are not just exhibits of cultural beauty but carry a glimpse of hope for those involved in this beautiful stone carving art of India. More hands are joining the movement and surely by this way, this beautiful art can go a long way to every corner of the world as Stonemart ™ ensures safe delivery of stone masterpieces to anywhere across the world not just PAN India.
