What Is a Goods Consignment (GC) Number?

A Goods Consignment (GC) number is a unique identification number assigned to a shipment when it is booked with the packing and moving company.

It helps identify your particular consignment and retrieve its tracking information. You can generally find this number on the consignment note or booking documents shared by the company.

Keep your GC number safe until your goods have been successfully delivered.

If you cannot find your GC number, do not worry. You can contact the official APML customer support team and share your booking details.

Keep the following information handy:

- Name registered at the time of booking.

- Pickup and destination locations.

- Registered mobile number.

The customer support team can guide you regarding the tracking number and the next steps.

What Should You Do If Your Agarwal Packers and Movers Tracking Status Is Not Updating?

Sometimes, customers may notice that their consignment status has not changed for some time. This does not necessarily mean that the shipment has stopped moving.

There can be several reasons for a delay in tracking updates:

- Shipment Is in Transit: Your goods may be travelling between two locations, and the next update may appear after reaching a designated point.
- Operational Updates Are Pending: Tracking information may take some time to reflect the latest movement.
- Number Entered Incorrectly: An incorrect GC number or typing error can prevent the system from retrieving the correct shipment details.
- Shipment Has Reached an Intermediate Location: Depending on the transportation route, consignments may pass through designated operational locations before reaching the destination.

If your tracking information remains unchanged or you receive an error message, contact the official APML support team with your GC number for assistance.
